WHAT COURT HOLDS IN LOCAL LAWSUIT

Supreme Court also Decides Important Tax Sale Controversy.

CHARLESTON, Mar. 7.—Release of property of a principal debtor, sufficient to pay the debt and held under levy by virtue of an execution, at the instance of the creditor, after service of the statutory notice from the sureties to make the debt out of the property of the principal, says the supreme court of appeals, wholly discharges the sureties, even though the debt, as to the principal, has not been paid, nor the execution legally satisfied.

The circuit court of Harrison county in the case of Williams, et al. vs. Brown, et al. The opinion of the court was written by Judge Poffenbarger.

Under the above circumstances, the surety may, in equity, compel execution of a release of the lien of the judgment as to their real estate as constituting a cloud on the title, but a bill for such purpose by two sureties, owning separate tracts of land, on the titles to which such lien is a common cloud, is not multifarious, and the constitution of a summary statutory proceeding for the release of such lien by one of such sureties does not preclude his joinder with a co-surety in a suit to obtain the same relief.

Probably the most important case decided by the supreme court on Tuesday was that in which the decree of the circuit court of Tucker county was affirmed by an opinion written by Judge Robinson, in Male vs. Moore. The decision holds that the misspelling of a name in the assessment list, of which the owner of property has no knowledge, will not lose to such owner the property assessed under such misspelled name.

“To support a tax sale and deed there must be a valid assessment—one that will impart full notice to the owner or taxpayer and make the proceedings due process of law,” says the court in the syllabus of the case, and “an assessment of land under a name so erroneous in departure from the correct name of the person chargeable with the taxes as to be liable to mislead one whose duty it is to pay or whose right it is to redeem, is invalid as a basis of tax sale and deed where the taxpayer or person entitled to redeem has no notice of the error.”

The decree sets aside and annuls a tax sale and deed in relation to the plaintiff's house and lot. The defendant, the purchaser at the tax sale and grantee in the deed, appealed to the supreme court of appeals.

Hornbrook was a former owner of the property. The defendant claimed it was validly sold under an assessment made in the name of this former owner, but the assessment relied on was in the name of Hornbrook. This erroneous assessment of the property plainly misled the sheriff and his deputies.

“The proceedings as a whole show that these officers did not consider the assessment as one against a person by the name of Hornbrook,” says the opinion of the higher court in affirming the decree below. “Since the assessment misled them, must we not reasonably assume that it was liable to mislead the subsequent owner of the property in seeking to pay the taxes or to redeem from the delinquency and the sale? The proceedings throughout are erroneous and misleading. Though the property was erroneously assessed and returned as delinquent in the name of Hornbrook, it was even more erroneously advertised in the name of Hornbrook. The sale and deed were made in the name of Hornbrook. See how many interpretations of the name of the assessment roll were given by the officers in acting on it! Is it at all strange that the plaintiff did not observe it to be her property?”

“Of course errors in the delinquent list and subsequent proceedings are cured after the deed is made,” continues the opinion, “but the error in the assessment is covered by no such curative statute. There must be a valid assessment; otherwise proceedings are invalid. There must be notice to the owner or taxpayer by an assessment that gives notice. A sale and deprivation of property cannot stand without due process of law by such a notice. The assessment must be one that will call to the owner or taxpayer to pay the taxes. If the assessment is made in a name that does not call to the owner of taxpayer of property and is no defectively described therein that he is not notified in relation to it, no valid proceedings for sale can be based on that assessment. It must be an assessment that will give notice—not one that will mislead.”

“So we hold that the assessment in the name of Hornbrook was no assessment in the name of Hornbrook. . . . The error no doubt caused the failure of the sheriff to collect the taxes from Hornbrook. If the assessment had been made in the proper name, presumably no occasion for the sale of the property would have arisen. In any event, plaintiff would have had notice to redeem, which she could not have by reason of the error.”

“There was no assessment of the property in the name of Hornbrook. The change of name may have been caused by mere error in copying, but nevertheless the error made the name to be other than the correct one. It matters not how it came, the assessment was in a name that did not impart complete notice to the owner or taxpayer. Though Johnson is only inadvertently written Johns, still the error publishes a wholly different name. One looking for Hornbrook does not see it when he finds Hoonbrook. He cannot be held to notice of an error merely because the two names are similar in some respects. Must one looking for Miller take notice that Mitter is intended for it, simply because the name could be inadvertently so written by crossing the middle letters? If the officers making up the assessment list change an ‘r’ to an ‘o,’ as it may have been done in this case, and the effect is to write a different name so that the owner or taxpayer is misled, then notice is not imparted to him. Officers, in justice to owners and taxpayers, must not make such mistakes. They must list
